'Honey spoon'

This is a story about
Honey bee:
Apis Mellifera

This Honeyspoon is a tribute to bees' diligent work. Each bee crafts merely 1/12 teaspoon of honey in its lifetime, fittingly mirrored in our spoon's center. Consider the labor behind that single drop, making that spoonful of honey taste even sweeter

'Mintspoon'

This is a story about
Mint Plant:
Mentha

The mint plant, cherished for its refreshing aroma, has a fascinating secret: it's a natural pest repellent. The scent humans love is overwhelming to insects, driving them away. This makes mint an excellent garden companion, protecting you from annoying bugs while you enjoy your refreshing mint drink

'Gingerspoon'

This is a story about
Tea Plant:
Camellia sinensis

The ginger plant has many wild variants that contribute to the ecosystem. The flowers attract bees, butterflies, and other insects, while the dense foliage shelters frogs, lizards, and small creatures. Wild ginger is rarely eaten, as many animals find its taste too intense; exactly the flavor we appreciate in our fresh ginger drinks.

'Snowdrop'
version Vintage or Stainless

This is a story about
Snowdrop
Galanthus nivalis

Snowdrops are chill-seekers. Their leaves are hardened to break through frozen ground, and their sap contains a natural antifreeze. The flowers only open at 9°C or above—the exact temperature at which queen bumblebees awaken from their winter sleep for a royal breakfast.
