Dealcoholization by Vacuum Evaporation

This process removes alcohol from the wine using the principle of distillation. It allows the alcohol to evaporate without heating the wine to high temperatures (max 32°C), which could alter its aromas and flavors. Once the alcohol is evaporated, it is separated from the rest of the wine.

This technique uses no water, avoids oxygen exposure, and is highly energy-efficient. During the process, the wine's natural aromas are captured and reintroduced : a method known as aroma recovery.
